

Model description

Agents move randomly around in a landscape with a renewable resource. Each agent burn energy each tick. A patch contains food or not, and an empty patch will be replenished with a probability that is higher when there are more neighboring patches with food. Agents eat when there is food on their patch, and reproduce when there are two agents with a minimum level of energy in each others proximity. When an agent runs out of energy it dies.